

The marriage liturgy is not a private family function, nor is it merely a social affair or a personal expression of the couple's love. Rather, it is an action of the entire church in whose presence two people commit themselves to one another. Because it is worship above all else, it is congregational. And because it is congregational, every effort should be made to enable the assembly to sing the same parts of the liturgy that are properly sung by them on Sundays.

Solo songs are alien to the spirit of the liturgy, particularly songs that usurp the congregation's role (such as the familiar setting of the Lord's Prayer by Albert Hay Malotte), as well as songs whose texts have little relevance to worship (including even quasi-religious songs that mention God or love in passing), songs whose texts reflect an unchristian view of the relationship of woman to man (such as "God, a Woman, and a Man"), and songs whose texts have little relevance to the context of the wedding (such as Ave Maria by Schubert or Bach-Gounod). Also undesirable are songs and instrumental music which are more at home on Broadway or television, in the nightclub or at the opera (such as the wedding marches for organ by Wagner - Here Comes The Bride - and Mendelssohn). Some music considered inappropriate for public worship could well be used later on at the reception. Unlike the vocal soloist, the role of the cantor is a proper liturgical role and is important in the singing of psalm texts, litanies and some acclamations.

Certain important parts of the liturgy are always to be sung, especially the Gospel Acclamation, the Holy, Holy, the Memorial Acclamation and the Amen. The psalm after the Old Testament reading is also best sung, with a cantor singing the verses and the assembly singing the antiphon. It is also recommended that the congregation sing a gathering song, and a psalm or hymn during communion, if at all possible. In an ecumenical context, it is desirable to include hymns that will be familiar to a variety of Christian traditions. Music well chosen can help non-Catholics to feel welcome and enable them to participate more fully. The presence of a parish choir, schola or ensemble can add greatly to the musical confidence of the assembly.

Worship and music practices vary widely from parish to parish. Couples should therefore plan their service with the parish musician and other staff members authorized to represent the policy and practice of that congregation. As always, good planning will be guided by an understanding of the nature of public worship, an appreciation for the specific character of Roman Catholic liturgy, a sensitivity to the size and nature of the congregation, and by good musical taste. The norms that apply are those set down in the General Instruction of the Roman Missal for all the Church's liturgy. Contrary to popular impression, there is no universal or Archdiocesan list of forbidden music.

The lighting of a unity candle is a custom that has entered into our celebrations; but it is not part of the marriage rite. The vows and the eucharist are the primary signs of unity. If there is a candle lighting, however, any music, if done at all, should be brief and instrumental, not vocal.

It is in the couple's best interest to engage the musicians from the regular music ministry of the parish, rather than from outside the parish. This will help to avoid embarrassment to the couple and their families, since it ensures a desirable continuity with the church's regular worship life. It protects the church's image in the minds of visitors. It helps to guarantee that the service will go smoothly because presider, cantor, organist and instrumentalists are used to working with each other. And it respects the professional code which protects the rights of church musicians as employees of the church.

Any good hymnal is a storehouse of fine texts and music for congregational singing. Hymns and psalms of thanks and praise are most appropriate, as are certain seasonal hymns. All congregational music in the lists below is taken from the hymnals and songbooks which are in wide and increasing use in churches of the archdiocese. However, this list should not be considered exhaustive.

MUSIC FOR ORGAN AND INSTRUMENTS

Instrumental music is especially appropriate for the recessional. It may also precede the gathering song as the processional enters the church, and it is suitable during the preparation of gifts. Some of the following pieces may be played on the piano. The titles marked with (C) are also useful during communion, either before or after the communion song has been sung. Some of the pieces are published by several publishers, sometimes singly and sometimes in collections. One of the local music retailers listed in the appendix can help you locate any music that your parish musician does not already have.
